Call for Board Members

Canadian Association Of Mad People (CAMP)

The purpose of the organisation is to help Mad People to thrive in all areas of life, in particular, the academic, cultural, political, and economic fields. The organisation will accomplish these goals, by hosting and or supporting academic conferences or assisting with scholarships, hosting or supporting cultural events and festivals in the city that promote Mad culture, advocating for change within systems that oppress or marginalise Mad people, and support initiatives that foster productivity and economic involvement for Mad people. If you would like to become a volunteer Board Member please email Kevin at: khareguy@live.ca

Repair Café is back in 2016

The Repair Café is excited to be at STEAMLabs for their first café in the new year! At this monthly gathering, they will have volunteer fixers available for computers, electronics, small appliances, clothes, jewellery, book and paper repairs, toys and other things. For whatever you need fixing, bring it on! You can learn how to fix it while enjoying a cup of coffee or tea. Depending on the visitor turnout, Registration may close at around 3:00 to 3:30 pm. It would be best to arrive early and not later than 3:00 pm. so that there is enough time for the fixer to examine your item. For more info about visiting the Repair Café, please visit this page:

<http://repaircafetoronto.ca/visit/>

When: Saturday, January 23, 12:00 Noon – 4:00 pm

Where: STEAMLabs, 192 Spadina Ave (just north of Queen St. West)

Cost: Free (Donations are welcome!)

[The Repair Café is held one Saturday each month at different locations in Toronto. At this café, there are volunteers (free of charge) available for fixing and showing you how to fix things. To avoid line-ups please arrive early. The Repair Café hopes to see you there or at a future Cafe.]

The Toronto Mental Health and Addictions Access Point

Dear fellow consumers/service users,

We are writing you today to share information and update you on the work of the Consumer Reference Group (CRG) of The Toronto Mental Health and Addictions Access Point. The CRG provides input and advice to The Access Point from the perspective of people with lived experience of mental health and addiction issues with the system.

You may or may not know, that The Access Point is the centralized access, one-application process, for housing and individual support services (e.g., case management or assertive community treatment) for service users. If you are looking for housing or mental health or addiction supports, this is the place you would contact. It was set up in July 2014 through an integration of Access 1 (individual support services) and CASH (supportive housing) to become The Access Point. Today, The Access Point screens and assesses applications for eligibility determination. There is some peer support and limited access to short-term services as well.

The goal of creating this single contact is to improve people's experience of accessing services. But, yes, wait lists are very long and wait times vary depending on the type of housing applied for (boarding homes, shared living environments, self-contained units), and the level of support required (24 hour support, daily support, weekly support etc.). High support housing and self-contained units are the longest wait, with up to 10 years and a shared room in a boarding home is the shortest and could be 2-3 months.

The application is lengthy and applying online can be a discouraging process. So there are discussions happening on continuing to improve the service and the processes. The Toronto Central and Central LHINs (funders of mental health and addiction services) will be consulting with the community in the New Year.

The CRG tries to bring the experience and voice of service users to The Access Point. We began a process of communication this past summer 2015 with a small presentation and feedback session with consumer and peer leads from member agencies that get referrals from The Access Point. We want to continue communicating. What we also need is feedback from consumer/survivor advocates to let us know what more can be done towards inclusion of the voices of service users in the process of system change. Remember, the system needs to be designed by the people who use it the most!

Feel free to email us any questions or your comments.

Mental health, carding records no longer disclosed in police record checks

Mental health records and records from police street checks -- known as carding -- can no longer be disclosed in police record checks in Ontario.

The Police Record Checks Reform Act, passed unanimously December 1, 2015 by the legislature, brings in standards for what information can be released and bans police from disclosing non-conviction records except in a narrow set of circumstances.

"The law was not clear as to what could be disclosed and what could not be disclosed, so as a result in many instances police were disclosing everything they had within their records," said Community Safety Minister Yasir Naqvi.

"Now there is absolute clarity as to what the law is and that non-conviction information cannot be disclosed."

Non-conviction records -- such as withdrawn or dismissed charges, acquittals and findings of not criminally responsible by reason of mental disorder -- can only be disclosed through some vulnerable sector checks for people working or volunteering with children or seniors.

Camille Quenneville, the CEO of the Ontario division of the Canadian Mental Health Association, said her organization supports the law.

"The disclosure of mental health police records has long been discriminatory and has increased the stigma associated with mental health issues," she said in a statement.

"We are pleased that all parties recognize that this unlawful and discriminatory practice must come to an end."

Michael Landsberg: Sick, Not Weak

Source: Mental Health News <http://www.mentalhealthnews.ca/education-and-advocacy/michael-landsberg-sick-not-weak>

EDUCATION AND ADVOCACY Michael Landsberg, host of TSN's Off The Record, talks about how to stay strong when dealing with a mental illness.

Mediaplanet What is your advice to people who may not be diagnosed with a mental illness, but feel there may be something wrong?

Michael Landsberg First off, from my experience people who think they “may” have a problem, often do have a problem. For me- it often comes down to answering one question: when you wake up in the morning - do you know with absolute certainty that you won’t experience joy that day? To me - the inability to experience joy is a classic symptom of depression.

“When we share, we should share loud and clear and without shame.”

MP How can the people who are not suffering assist those who are?

ML Non sufferers have to understand their limitations. Try not to make suggestions that you think will help, because they likely won’t. If you haven’t felt depression- you can’t understand it.

Also, try to lessen the person who’s struggling’s guilt. Let them know that you don’t expect them to act the way they did before they got sick. This is so important because the cycle is “I’m depressed, I’m ruining everyone else’s life, and now I’m more depressed.”

MP What is the goal behind your “sick, not weak” initiative?

ML The goal is so simple. Have every person I can reach understand that a person with a mental illness is “sick not weak.” The perception has been and still is that somehow we bring on our own mental illness through weakness of character. “I am sick not weak.” If we believe that - the stigma will fade.

MP What are the signs that someone you care about may be suffering from a mental illness?

ML First off, the most profound sign is when they respond “no” to your question “are you okay?” Dialogue is so crucial. The subject is so foreign to most people and carries such an awful stigma that we need to find a way to attack it - and the only way is with talk. But if there is denial - look at the things the person previously enjoyed and judge whether they are still enjoying them.

MP On twitter you mention a depression scale. When you’re having those bad days, how do you get up, get through them, and make the impact that you do?

ML I survive because I have to survive. That’s a fact of life for anyone who has a chronic illness. When I fall below a 5 on the ‘sickter’ scale life becomes a struggle. It’s as if someone just doubled the weight I was trying to lift. I try to use those days to share with others what the pain really feels like, because on good days - the torture of the bad is tough to remember.

MP What do you think is the biggest problem about the way we currently talk about mental illness?

ML First off the name “mental illness”. What does it mean? Why do we use it? Is this not a physical illness of the brain? Why do we distinguish? The word mental suggests that it’s somehow different than all the other illnesses. Secondly - we need to stop whispering. When we share, we should share loud and clear and without shame. If you tell people you’re struggling and say it weakly- people will perceive you as weak. What we want to convey should sound something like this: “I’m sick. I need help. This is serious. Don’t for a second think that I have brought this on myself. I didn’t ask for it and I can’t will it away. And if you make me feel like it’s my fault- I will be really, really upset and angry.”

Computer Column

And even more on Windows 10...

If you accepted one of those in-your-face offers to update to Windows 10, and you've got problems, you're not alone. Even with the first major update to Win10, which I had hoped would fix all the glitches, a lot of people still have headaches with it. Here are the ones I hear about the most, and I'm sure there are lots more.

1. Your printer was working perfectly well before you updated, now it doesn't. The easiest way to fix this is to uninstall the printer and then reinstall it. Hopefully you still have the CD with drivers on it, if not you can do a Google search for '(make and model of printer) Drivers'. You can also do this..
Start>Control Panel> Devices and Printers, right click on your printer and choose to remove it. Then install the driver, either from the CD or the website. Don't worry if you can't find Windows10 drivers yet, 7 or 8.1 version will work.

This is the first major, totally unnecessary, pain in the butt. And then...

2. You can't play your DVD's anymore. No error message, no clue as to why, they just don't play. This is because Microsoft chose to release Windows 10 without a media player!?!?!? So you have to download one. You can download and install Windows Media Player from here:

<http://windows.microsoft.com/en-us/windows/download-windows-media-player>

There are lots of alternate media players, I've been using VLC for many years and have never been disappointed with it. VLC has good support, too, if you run into problems: <https://www.videolan.org/vlc/>

3. All your Favourites have disappeared. If you normally use Internet Explorer, with a long list of Favourites, the shiny new browser, Microsoft Edge, won't have them. Luckily, you can get them back, click on those three little lines at the upper right hand side of Edge, and choose 'Import Favourites'. Click on Internet Explorer and import. You might want to think about an alternate browser though, try Firefox or Chrome.

4. Increasingly slow start-up and shut-down. Windows 10 was probably quite quick when you first started using it, but a few weeks or months later, things are slowing down. This is because Win10 has a huge number of applications that are, by default, set to start every time you start up your computer. 99% of them don't need to start just because the computer is turned on. You can disable this feature...

Go to your Task Manager (Ctrl Alt Dlt) and choose 'more details'. Click on 'start-up' then click on the status column. Look at each app, and decide if you need it to start automatically. If you're not sure what the app is, Google it.

5. Windows 10 forces you to update automatically. You can't get out of it...as far as I know and I'm still looking. Make sure you have System Restore set up so you can roll back to a time before the latest update if it turns out to be a piece of crap. It happens, believe me!

6. Your programs run more slowly, and you have trouble running more than one at the same time. If you like to watch videos while several other programs are open, you might see a difference. This is because by default, Windows 10 doesn't give you enough virtual memory. Virtual memory is a bit of the hard drive set aside to act as RAM. If you don't have a truckload of RAM, maybe 1 or 1.5 GB, this can be a problem. You can reset virtual memory, luckily!

ControlPanel>Performance>Adjust the appearance and performance of Windows>Advanced. Click the Advanced tab and hit 'Change' under the Virtual memory section.

Uncheck the 'Automatically manage paging file size for all drives' box, select the drive containing Windows 10 (probably C:), and select Custom Size. You can Google the recommended setting, usually 1.5 times your RAM. This is a useful video...<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=NkHjRKfUnNc>

Set and OK the settings and reboot your computer. BTW rebooting your machine gives it a chance to make changes and reconfigure the operating system to compensate for them.

7. Superannoying popup ads (or notifications) for Office products. Especially if you like MSOffice just the way it is and have no intentions of changing it. You'll still get these ads.

Open the Start menu's All Apps list, right-click on the Get Office app, and select Uninstall. You'll be asked to confirm the deletion; do so. Reboot the computer just to make sure Windows 10 gets the message.

Anything I haven't covered? Please email me. I don't use Windows 10, I decided to give Microsoft a chance to fix all the glitches before I installed it. But I'll try to help.

Arts

Wednesday, January 2 to Thursday, January 31, with the opening reception on Sunday, January 10 from 1:00 pm – 5:00 pm. Judith Snow Lasting Images. The Colours of Judith Snow were vibrant, fragrant, unabashedly in the forefront of the forefront: a social inventor; a trailblazer; a relentless advocate for Inclusion. She championed communities that welcome diversity, including all persons with disabilities, especially people who do not speak in voice, as full contributing citizens. She was an unstoppable dreamer, and courageous instigator, motivator, and challenger. She was a prophet, a muse, an author, a speaker, an actor, an artist. As an author, trainer and educator for over 40 years, she travelled widely: the US, UK, Europe, the Caribbean and Canada. Judith's impact remains worldwide. In 2003, Judith developed Laser Eagles Art Guild and discovered that she was a visual artist herself. Her entire life was dedicated to the vision: 'There really is no disability': "People are always contributing something. The work is to see the value and potential in what they are contributing and build that through relationships into community and economic opportunities." Montgomery's Inn, 4709 Dundas Street W. Free Admission
